Here we are, June 2011 – half way through the year. The Central Florida Metal Detecting Club has been fortunate to have a strong, growing membership base and a dedicated group of active volunteers.

Without each one of these individuals the club would have a hard time succeeding however, this month I'd like to feature one club MEMBER OF THE MONTH who has been a dedicated volunteer for the past several years. This club member has tirelessly spent time, effort, and personal money to help move many club projects along and has completed a great deal of the work alone. Often these efforts have been behind the scenes and most of us really don't know how much is involved to make things run so smoothly. When you see her at the next club meeting, say "thank you" to Lorrie Sprigg for a job much appreciated. Thanks Lorrie.

Last month, the club held an "Old Town Hunt". Over twenty members hit the local parks and private hunt sites for about 90 minutes of competitive detecting. Within that 90 minutes, some of the finds included coins from the 1800's and jewelry worthy of a queen's admiration. An additional hunt was held after the Old Town Hunt and most club members went home with few wheat pennies to add to their collections. I expect to see several of these recent items on the finds tables this month.

The 2011 Calendar of Events can now be viewed on the club website thanks to Jerry Hitson. The next hunt is set for June 18th. Details for this "BINGO HUNT" will be explained at the meeting.

I hope to see all of you at the next meeting.
Alan

Discovery of musket balls, artifacts may signal site of an original fort Lauderdale

Musket balls and other relics from what could be the remains of a U.S. military fort built in 1839 have been unearthed from beneath a Fort Lauderdale parking lot near the Sheraton Yankee Clipper Hotel.

The discovery two weekends ago has touched off excitement among local archaeologists and historians who believe it may be the location of the fort for which the city is named.

“It’s an extremely interesting find,” said Broward County archaeologist Matthew DeFelice. “It is in the vicinity of where the third Fort Lauderdale was built. We can’t be positive, but we know this area was used by the military for the fort and that some of the artifacts are consistent with that.”

Artifacts found at the site were not immediately made available for public inspection. They are said to include musket balls, old coins and buttons from military uniforms.

Other evidence found at the site – shell tools and the bones of animals and fish – suggests that thousands of years earlier it was occupied by Native Americans.

“The material leads me to believe there’s a prehistoric site beneath this,” said Miami-Dade County archaeologist Jeff Ransom, a Fort Lauderdale resident. Read More
